Dear Bud,

With late-arriving company not yet here, I've had a chance to scan the index to "The King God Didn't Save". I'll be surprised if there is any sensation in it for us. However, this is not to say there is no possibility of value or clues.

One of the typographical errors you might want to correct is Kilpatrick rather than Kirkpatrick, James J., and he is the former editor, etc.

The entries that seem to offer more promise are those on the cities, esp. Atlanta and B'ham; FBI and Hoover, esp. confrontation, bugging, etc., rumor-mongering; threats and the Lorraine Motel.

I'd hope Williams had the last speech, but he doesn't seem to. I was supposed to get it a month ago but I haven't. It is of value only because it foreshadows the change in his philosophy reported in LOOK by Abernathy.

I suppose if I ever saw the book I'd read it, but the index seems to support the opinion of my friend at Bantam.

Sincerely,
